

Five Education Franchises Worth Your Investment

Franchising News | 30 Oct 2019

Education is evidently flourishing, but which concepts excel above the rest in this dense and dynamic sector?

For philanthropic entrepreneurs, helping children learn through a proven education franchise concept is a no-brainer. Not only is this a sector where high financial returns are entirely possible, but the societal benefits of outstanding tutoring are clear.

But it's not quite that simple: education comes in many forms, and a premises-based franchise boasts unique benefits, such as a community atmosphere and specialized facilities, that an in-home tutoring network might lack – and vice versa.

So if you're scratching your head trying to work out which business would be best for you, let us help with the brands that are building the franchisees of tomorrow.

Young Rembrandts

Instilling kids with the confidence that if they can think it, they can draw it, Young Rembrandts is the perfect concept for creative franchisees with an artistic flair.

Aimed at children aged three to 12 years old, the brand currently has over 100 locations throughout the U.S. and Canada – with a steady expansion overseas. Franchisees can operate their business entirely from home, and the lessons themselves take place in schools and community centers, taking advantage of the strong Young Rembrandts name.

“Our franchisees provide registration services, manage all classes, and provide teachers and supplies,” says Bette Fetter, CEO. “It’s a hassle-free program for schools to offer and parents to benefit!
